

Prof Dr David Gunnell

David Gunnell is Professor of Epidemiology and Head of Research at the University of Bristol's School of Social and Community Medicine. He is a National Institute of Health Research (NIHR) Senior Investigator and a member of the National Suicide Prevention Advisory Group for England.

His research is focused on two main areas: (1) national and international strategies for preventing suicide and improving mental health; (2) early life influences on adult health, particularly mental illness, and the biological mechanisms underlying these influences. He leads an NIHR (England) funded programme of research in support of the National Suicide Prevention Strategy for England together with colleagues from the Universities of Oxford and Manchester.
